By Nicole McNamara Quattrocchi

Two pre-school teachers with the patience of saints and the talent of a Disney-relative decided to have some fun with their camp kids, and the results were a face-painting business with more talent, direction and fun than anyone could have ever expected.

Mariela Delgado and Angela Acosta are pre-school teachers at Imagination Station by day. In the summer of 2015, they thought they'd have a little extra fun with the campers and used their amazing artistic skills to create unique, breathtaking, and in some cases, scary, face-paintings. After posting some of the pictures on-line, they started booking birthday parties. People flocked to their stand and were eager to book them. Adults and children marveled at the designs. This is when the Mariel Angela business began.

As far as what sets them apart, these two women have the ability to really connect with these kids on their level. No child is afraid of face-painting when approached by Mariela and Angela. They have the gift that teachers have that put children at ease. More than this, they love the kids. They enjoy making their dreams come true through a real appreciation of wearable art.

Their success is growing as the fame stretches beyond the walls of Imagination Station and local markets. However humble these two ladies may be, their success is clear in the delight of the children who get to wear their art. The children are so excited to see how their face will look when made up with a shark attacking their mouth or eye, or rainbow princesses, or having their favorite characters painted on them.

Mariela and Angela think that their advantage in the industry is that they are very approachable. They have the motherly instinct and they are very friendly. They are also bilingual giving them a wider appeal to clients.

Happy customers display their facial art in various locations. Below, Stevie Quattrocchi and Sabrina Quattrocchi pose with Angela Acosta of MarielAngela face-painting.

The Quattro Firm Believes In Female Empowerment

Mariela and Angela think that their advantage in the industry is that they are very approachable. They have the motherly instinct and they are very friendly. They are also bilingual giving them a wider appeal to clients.

Each of these talented ladies have their own favorite themes to paint. Angela loves to paint the more feminine designs like princesses and butterflies whereas Mariela loves the more traditionally masculine designs such as dragons, dinosaurs and cartoon characters. When asked what their favorite aspect of this industry has been, it's no question: they love to see the delight and wonder on each kids face as they look in the mirror and light up.

We had to ask about their favorite reactions to face-painting and again, each of them had a different favorite. For Mariela, she loved the reaction of a little boy who wanted a Mega Pokémon character and he had doubted her talent. When he looked at the reaction, he was amazed. For Angela, she remembers painting the face of an older woman who had asked for just a simple design. She was shocked and pleased with her results.

When asked for advice for other entrepreneurial women, Mariela and Angela said to stick to something that you love to do. When it's something that you enjoy doing, it no longer feels like work.

The Quattro Firm thanks Mariela and Angela for their advice and sharing their beautiful story. We look forward to following their artwork all over the faces of Palm Beach County children.
